Converting Online Leads

It's no secret, online leads can be tricky. They take longer to convert and require more hands-on nurturing than leads from other sources. This happens because the average online home shopper is at least 6-12 months out from being ready to purchase.

But imagine if you had the right process in place to strategically engage, qualify, nurture, and convert those leads? When you have the right real estate CRM system in place, all of this is possible.

1) EARLY BIRD GETS THE LEAD

Did you know that more than half of home buyers work with the very first agent they speak to? That's why it's critical to have a real estate CRM system in place to engage with new leads as soon as they register on your site.

If you are partnered with a strong CRM, you should be notified as soon as a new lead registers on your site. Do you have a system for responding to new leads or tracking how quickly you respond? Industry best practice is that you should be engaging those leads within 5 to 15 minutes.

If not, you need to figure out a new game plan. The truth is that you are incredibly busy and can't be available around the clock to engage new online leads (especially when they're not the hottest leads you're dealing with). When you streamline this process, you end up with a more fluid and intelligent system that is more likely to convert those leads into clients.

2) KNOW HOW TO ENGAGE

Based on data, a text-to-call “hybrid approach” works really well. To do this, you’d first leverage the consistency and high open rates of a text message to start the conversation and get the lead engaged to build a little bit of trust. Then, invite the lead to a phone call. If you’ve executed correctly, they’re more likely to accept.

When using a Lead Concierge system, your concierge will leverage best practices with lead preferences to assure an excellent consumer experience. Once you understand these numbers, you can calculate how many leads you need to generate and qualify in order to close your desired amount of deals.

3) PERSONALIZE AND BRAND ALL COMMUNICATION

Consumers are constantly inundated with sales pitches and marketing. That's why it's critical to approach a new lead with the right language.

Start with a personal touch and address your lead with their first name. You want to introduce yourself and establish your brand from the get-go. And if you have insights from your IDX Website, reference what they're searching for.

This is your first point of contact, so it has to be your best foot forward. That's why we recommend that if you are going to automate this process, use a human over a bot.

4) FOLLOW UP FLAWLESSLY

Ask yourself: What process do you have in place for following up? Are you or your agents responding to their own leads? What is the response time? Are you being notified by your CRM?

These are important questions, but most agents ignore them. Why?

Most agents would agree: following up is pretty boring and can be extremely difficult. However, as most agents would also agree, it is absolutely necessary for your practice. To make it easier on yourself, you need to streamline. The simpler you can make this process, the better equipped you'll be to convert more leads into clients and continuously go after these potential new clients.

5) FIND THE HIDDEN GEMS

Following up from our last point, agents are notorious for quickly deeming a lead “trash.” Time is money and as salespeople, you only have so much time in the day to find new leads. However, agents are more likely than not to miss those hidden gems in their database. That’s why instituting a real estate CRM system that creates long-term nurture plans, eAlerts, and drip campaigns will help your business tremendously in the long haul.

With the right system, long-term nurture plans will help grow your database, both in size and value, over time. Having eAlerts provides leads who register, but aren’t ready to buy or sell, notifications that act as an automated drip campaign. A good CRM creates an environment that works towards your leads schedule. So when they are finally ready to take the leap and make purchases, you’ll be the first agent on top of mind.

Think of your CRM as an incubator. The eggs might not have hatched yet but you know there’s a little chicklet inside ready to purchase that 3-bed, 3-bath listing down the street.

6) TRACK YOUR OWN PERFORMANCE

Whether it's an ISA, a lead concierge system, your team of agents, or you executing your lead engagement plan, you need to be tracking your performance. Without recording this data, it will be near-impossible for you to make the correct strategic decisions for how you generate leads and market your practice.

Tracking your performance also provides accountability. Having a tool that tracks you or your agents' daily to-dos and activities creates transparency for brokers and team leaders without the need to micromanage.

7) BE WHERE THE MONEY IS

If you want to implement a profitable and effective lead engagement plan, the perfect mixture of technology and people is critical.

Your time is simply too valuable to be spent sitting idly around the phone to qualify and engage leads around the clock. Instead, you need a system that takes on the heavy work and narrows down the leads who are worth your attention.

Online leads are incredibly valuable for your business and they require meticulous attention to detail in order to convert. Having a real estate CRM system that helps you properly manage your online leads for you can help you do just that.
